

Dear Kit.

This is a source that I mentioned to Julian Hoptman, someone very likely to cast more light on Sverdlovsk. As far as I know, nothing was done!

Goldfarb is now at Columbia here in N.Y.C. as you know; his father is still not allowed to leave Russia. (I have had to caution Goldfarb to be a little more discreet in his own public statements until his father gets out.)

Dear Sir,

I have known from Dr. Alex Goldfarb that you are interesting in the Soviet microbiology in connection with biological war. During your's last meeting Alex mentioned my name as a possible source of such kind of information. Since 1963 till 1977 I was a head of the branch of the Mechnikov Institute of Microbiology in Moscow that had deal with development and production of many kinds of diagnostic sera. I was not involved in any military elaborations directly, but it's known for me some information about it into another branches of the Institute.

If you are still interested in this field and suggest that I may supply you some new information it will be pleasure for me to help you.

Yours truly,

Dr. Feigin
